Stephen Penders @StephenPenders · Oct 31 IDEAS & LIFE

A recent post by @naval made me introspective about the passage of time and its relativity to parenthood.

My son is 15. He's going to be out of the house and living his own life much sooner than I realize. I try to spend time with him as much as I can, yet there's always an excuse to occupy my attention elsewhere.

I wish I'd spent more time with him when he was younger. I look forward to spending time with the man he becomes when he's 25 and even 35.

But the present is now. And here I am pontificating on X about the whole thing instead of being with him.

I'm gonna go wake his ass up to play catch and grab some burgers. He's much more important than building a brand on social media.

I like to think of changing behavior the way I think of water. If you try to grab at it or mold it into something, it will slip through your fingers. But change its container, and it naturally flows into a new shape.

How much harm has been done by labeling kids "behind" like, there is some sort of perfect track to follow

I guess it also explains people feeling like this as adults in work too

We are so much more complex than these paths we think we can follow in our head

SCIENCE & HEALTH

New Hopkins study shows that a couple of doses of psilocybin provides benefits lasting 6 months in chronic Lyme patients. This is consistent with what I've seen in patients over the years.

SCIENCE & HEALTH

There are 2 types of women with PCOS. Lean and overweight.

The overweight ones get told to lose weight (accurate). The lean ones rarely get their insulin checked.

On the gold standard test, 75% of lean women with PCOS were insulin resistant.

Being thin doesn't mean you are healthy. Ask for fasting insulin.

NATURE & HISTORY

You're here because an unbroken chain of your ancestors, from tadpoles to monkeys to now, replicated.

Don't be the first one to miss the branch.

BOOKS & FAITH

I keep thinking about this line from a richard rohr lecture: "the opposite of faith is not doubt; the opposite of faith is certitude." people's claims to "certainty" are always a form of denial, a kind of ego-defense. true faith involves an embrace of both doubt and conviction also there was a couple at the grocery store and there were some toys near the candy, and the guy goes "maybe we'll give the coolest kid a hotwheels car.." and i started laughing and we connected and then i suggested that they get 10 hotwheels cars and tell a bunch of different kids that they had the best costume of the night and they get a hot wheels car

then i got my candy and then i saw them again and they were carrying a bunch of hotwheels cars and he told me they're gonna do it hahahahaha

There are always video games in real life, for instance fumbling with keys in the dark, holding the wrong one to the light.

That's all for today.
